Located along the curved edge of Woodlawn Cemetery, the Lotus plot is the site of the Schliess family mausoleum, a modern resting place designed for the family of Martha (born Haas) and Charles R. Schliess¹. Both husband and wife were second-generation German-American citizens who called New York City's Upper East Side neighborhood home for their entire adult lives. Charles was a successful commercial real estate broker, and the family moved in many sociable circles and clubs in Manhattan and up and down the East Coast². When Martha died in 1934 at age 66, Charles set about to design and construct the family mausoleum to house not only her remains, but with room also for himself and their two children, Lucille and Aubrey. However, the design of the mausoleum at Woodlawn is a monument to not only a tight-knit family, but a family willing and able to embrace new forms of design and thinking, breaking away from traditional iconographies in a refreshing and modern way.

Set in the middle of the plot, the mausoleum cannot be viewed from the street, so one approaches by weaving through a bramble of neighboring headstones and monuments without the aid of a path or clear axial vista. Yet, the Schliess crypt nevertheless stands out from the rest due to its distinct Art Deco style, a stark juxtaposition amongst the Classical orders and religious symbols that characterize the majority of Woodlawn's monuments. The building, designed by Harrison Granite Co., sits beneath a large oak tree, the nearly square form raised only one step above the gently sloping ground. The entire form is adorned only by incised carvings in the granite face: Vertical lines on either side of the door frame may be a nod to columnal fluting, but the flat relief carving effect predominates especially when seen alongside the carved Schliess family name centered above the door, writ in a beautiful Art Deco-style sans serif font and bookended by shallowly carved sunrise motifs set in squares. The overall effect is of strong symmetry and central axial alignment, and the lack of predominant decor means that this double door entrance is the most visually decorative element of the mausoleum. The doors themselves are inset with glass protected and adorned by intricate bronzework. Also symmetrical and linear in form, the pattern is made up of intersecting bars in an almost Chinese style. The glass frames behind were also designed to be operable, allowing for ventilation when desired.

Beyond the door is a cool, clean, and well-maintained space. Four crypts of Tennessee Pink marble flank the entrance, two stacked atop each other on either side. And finally, directly opposite the entrance is the most colorful facet of the monument; a painted-glass window of four horizontal panes, depicting a serene woodland scene. Our eyes follow the curves of a narrow creek running between the trees to the orange and gold horizon beyond.

This window is the only decorative element in the interior. Uncarved walls of the same Harrison granite are unadorned save for mouldings in Tennessee Pink marble from E. L. Smith & Co. of Barre, VT, the same stone that also forms the crypts, uncarved save for the names of the deceased. This slightly reflective and smooth stone is in harmony in color and style to the prevailing granite structure. The simplicity is far from austere, however, and very much follows the contemporary design thinking of New York in 1934, which encompassed both the trends of Art Deco two-dimensionality and the as-yet rising tide of Modernist architectural theory. Being in the real estate industry at this time, when iconic Modern projects like Rockefeller Center, the Chrysler and Empire State Buildings were topping off, it's plausible that Charles was tuned into this shifting of style, and eager to express it in his own personal realm. Let's return to the painted window, though. While the stone was chosen to remain unadorned by religious sculpture or iconographies, the window represents an opportunity the family could have taken to depict a religious scene or symbol, as is so common in graves — death and continuation onto eternal life is a concept shared by many mono- and polytheistic religions. However, Charles chose a completely secular scene for this painted window, a pastoral landscape evocative of the American landscape they called home. The architectural style of their mausoleum already was a departure from the popularity of Classical forms of Greek, Roman, and Egyptian temples, but the lack of visible religious fervor or recognition is a departure more radical still. These design choices that coalesce into a simply modern, and public, expression of taste at Woodlawn tell us much about the Schliess family values, and this makes their monument a unique site of study within Woodlawn's collection.

The Schliess monument is a relative newcomer to the Lotus plot, but in its nearly nine decades of existence the quarried materials have remained in good condition. This was desired, as evidenced by correspondence between Charles and the engineers at Harrison: Repeatedly in the language of their contract, the writers indicate "best quality" materials, specific details to be executed only by "skilled workmen," amongst other orders for detailed hammered surfaces, tightly finished joints to 1/16th inch specifications, and stones rubbed at the facade and cut to even planes even where hidden from the visitor's eye. However, in addition to the high standards of quality control and workmanship pursued by Charles in its design, the mausoleum likely remains in good condition due to the simplicity of the forms and relative protection in the shade of a massive oak tree on the lot, its roots even growing up and around the southeast corner of the base. The roots show no evidence of damage to the building, and the cleanly hammered granite walls and linear carvings are crisp and free from visible signs of water damage, notably on the interior, so we assume that the eight vents included in the design are working in harmony with the heavy granite roof cap and clean joints throughout. On the roof slab exterior, however, there are linear streaks indicating biological growth in the direction of rain runoff, though these are secluded to only the innermost roof slab and treatable if readily attended to.

However, the metalwork of the mausoleum shows signs of wear likely due to oversight by the designers and subsequent maintenance crews. While not severe enough to threaten the health of the overall monument, the bronze doors are speckled with white markings indicating damage from improper chemicals used for cleaning. The result is a speckled, chalky look reminiscent of the runoff of salt deposits. While this is aesthetically unpleasing, it is not as structurally disruptive as damage to the window frames within the mausoleum. There are visible signs of corrosion in the lower right and left hand corners, where rust-red particles show the decay of the frame. It is possible that the builders from Harrison Granite Co. did not take into account the nobility of the metals they were using: It's possible that the bronze enframement is paired with a lower hierarchy of metal, like steel, around the base, and that bronze is causing rapid decay of its steel counterpart via galvanic action. The Harrison contract stipulates that the art glass was "to be selected by Owner," possibly from a third-party artisan, but more likely from a standard stock from Harrison's in-house designers. Yet even in-house work allows for the possibility of unclear communication regarding the details of installation. It's also obvious from the contract that this was an expensive piece of the project, as it states, "Cost of art glass not to exceed $18.50 per square foot." There are four separate panes of glass in the piece, filling out a window four feet tall: $18.50 per square foot would amount to approximately $303.05 today. I would recommend a reframing of this beautiful painted art glass, a significant investment of Charles', to ensure that the frame holding the clear protective glass panels encasing it don't falter and expose the painted portions to rain, weather, and possible ejection from the window frame itself. The freeform painted style of the frame and it's antique age would make it difficult if not impossible to replace, and threaten the integrity of the Schliess vision for their monument, as it's the sole decorative element of the resting space.

The consistent high-level craftsmanship and the obvious break from traditional design paints a compelling picture of the figure of Charles and the attitude of his family. The family remained generally out of the limelight, save for a few mentions in the New York Herald Tribune, often citing the presence of the Schliess family as "newcomers" as at a Junior Aid League benefit for the Lenox Hill Hospital, a noted "Russian concert at the Indian Harbor Yacht Club in Greenwich, CT, and a "Dog Exhibit" at the Lackawanna Club in the Poconos. However, Charles was known in his industry for his brokering of commercial real estate transactions, and was a pioneer in the development of central Midtown as a business center in the 20s and 30s. He was notably quoted for a piece on the development of the Sixth Avenue corridor, what we now consider the main artery of Midtown and the Theatre District. In the New York Times in March of 1930 Schliess says that the sector is "the next logical theatrical center following the razing of the elevated," the demolition of the above-ground subway line in the area being the centerpiece of the article³. This involvement also aligns with his noted relationship with the Shubert family of theatre moguls, also cited in The New York Times article in relation to his then-office of employment, Trebuhs Real Estate Company⁴.

Progressive thought is also visible in the remains present in the mausoleum of Martha and Charles' daughter, Lucille. Having lived a full life (she died at age 79, in 1985) she still nevertheless retains her given name, Lucille Schliess. Unlike her parents, she also was cremated: her ashes are stored in a small box atop the right-hand side crypt, but within the family monument all the same. Cremation is not a practice supported by many Christian religions, and also the keeping of a last name may insinuate that Lucille never married. We can speculate that this means Lucille either lived a bachelorette life or she was possibly a gay woman, as history has "labeled" many individuals of the LGBTQ+ community as "never married." However during her lifetime, Lucille was known for her active role in women's involvement in wartime efforts. A February 1942 issue of The New York Herald Tribune includes a large photograph of "Miss Lucille Schliess, Director of the junior auxiliary of the American Women's Voluntary Services" in a recognizable military-issued uniform. The article highlights the post-Pearl Harbor enthusiasm of teenage girls entering into voluntary roles supporting the war effort from home through basic medical and first aid training. An earlier article in the Tribune also hosts a small announcement that Lucille was involved in a local New York high school visit for the explicit purpose of recruiting students to the corps. This robust role in national politics and activism at the time shows a headstrong and independent spirit, a woman who was unwilling to sit at home and watch the world go by.

The Schliess family mausoleum commemorates a well-to-do, second generation German-American living in the society of upper Manhattan throughout the highs of the roaring 20s as well as the dark years of the Depression and World War II. The choice of design for final resting place is notable not only that it is owned by the matriarch of the family, but also that it is decisively modern — its Art Deco styling is authentic for the time, and shows that the family, or at least its "head of household," Mr. Charles Robert Schliess, had a finger on the pulse of contemporary art and design. The Art Deco style is so integral to the burial site that it becomes the driving narrative — there are no religious symbols, remnants of professional or worldly power, or unnecessary signs of wealth. The centerpoint being a painted window depicting a calm natural scene is a distinct departure from most of the graves in Woodlawn, and surely in America during the time. Though well enough off to afford a mausoleum at such a vaunted cemetery, the Schliess family memorial communicates a progressive family willing to embrace modern ideals, and depart cleanly from tradition.

Girls Enter Voluntary Defense Training Program With Enthusiasm

A. W. V. S. Junior Group Added 2,800 Since Pearl Harbor

The enthusiasm with which girls between the ages of fourteen and eighteen are entering into the defense-training program of the American Women's Voluntary Services through that organization's junior auxiliary is shown in a report issued yesterday by Miss Lucille Schliess, director. On Dec. 7 the auxiliary, then still in its infancy, had some 200 members. In four days after the attack on Pearl Harbor 500 youngsters went to A. W. V. S. headquarters at 11 East Fifty-eighth Street seeking some way, no matter how small, to be of service to their coun-try. The enthusiasm has continued, she says, and today the junior auxiliary has nearly 3,000 members in 22 units throughout New York.

Mrs. Henry Sadowsky, chairman of junior auxiliary units, reports that junior units are usually set up in connection with already existing senior units. The most recent is the Harlem junior unit, which opened yesterday at the Dunbar Gardens Club with an initial enrollment of fifty.

In the junior auxiliary's program existing skills are utilzed for service, while new skills are being developed through special training courses in an endeavor to train girls not only for wartime usefulness but also for community responsibility in peacetime.

Emphasis on Emergency

Emphasis is on courses of immediate relevance to the emergency, such as junior and standard first aid under qualified Red Cross instructors, civilian protection (A. R. P.) and physical fitness and drill under the direction of Miss Catherine Van Rensselaer. Under a re-

These include emergency cooking, child care, recreation and the A. W. V. S. volunteer workshops "know your community," in which department, and clerical services. girls learn how to use maps and directorics.

Before a member of the auxiliary may take courses or wear the junior uniform she must give thirty hours of service. Volunteer services for juniors include acting as couriers (for this each girl must have a letciprocal arrangement with the Girl ter of permission from parent or bility off the shoulders of senior Scouts these A. Eighty hours of service entitle a girl to a red service stripe, 130 hours to a white stripe and 180 hours to a blue stripe. Girls who have given many hours of service may be appointed junior leaders in charge of squads of their fellow members, thus taking some of the responsi-quarters was in charge of nearly a hundred couriers, until she herself was graduated to more confidential service in a government office.

Work Out Own Services

Many of the junior units of the A. W. V. S. have worked out special services of their own. The Knickerbocker Village juniors, under the leadership of Ruth Bobrow, have undertaken to watch young children in the village community at times when the parents want to be free to attend senior training courses or to perform such defense duties as the air raid warden service. Juniors in the tenth and eleventh divisions of the A. W. V. S. in central Manhattan are helping in settlement houses and hospitals, entertaining children and reading to the blind. Juniors on Staten Island are organizing a bicycle corps for courier service.

Such organizations as the Naval Relief Society and the U.S.O. have made use of junior auxiliary couriers and clerical helpers. A program for co-operation in the victory garden campaign is being planned for next spring, and juniors have cleared vacant lots for planting.

Most of the work of the junior auxiliary is concentrated in New York, but units are springing up in other parts of the country, from New Orleans to California. Last week fifteen - year - old Margaret Sims departed for her home on the west coast after months of training here to assist in the organization of the junior auxiliary program there.

Assisting Miss Schliess at junior auxiliary headquarters are Mrs. Milton Douglas, Mrs. T. F. Farrell, Miss Louise Orth, and Mrs. Henry Sadowsky, chairman of junior units.

Mrs. Helen Schleifer is consultant on junior auxiliaries for national

COMMUNITY PLAN IN EAST SIXTIES

Residents Between Second and Third Avenues Combine to Make Cheerful Home Centre.

TO MAINTAIN RESTRICTIONS

More Than Twenty Dwelling Transfers in Sixty-first Street Within a Year.

One of the most interesting of the many residential community associa-tions organized within recent years for the improvement of their respective localities is the East Sixtles Property Owners' Association, just formed by a group of fifty or more property owners and residents in the blocks from Sixtieth to Sixty-second Street, between Third and Second Avenues. New York-ers who have a vague idea that the well-to-do home centres on the east side above Fifty-ninth Street are to be found only west of Lexington Avenuc, with an occasional exception in a block between that thoroughfare and Third Avenue, would do well to make a tour of inspection in that area of the lower Sixties between Third and Second Avenues. In the Sixty-first and Sixty-seeond Street blocks, the type of resi-dence while less ornate than many of the more modern dwellings nearer Fifth Avenue presents an appearance fully as neat and attractive as any residential blocks in the city.

To maintain this condition and to provide for future improvements led to the formation of the new associa-tion. It is the result of many weeks of careful planning, and, while the fundamental system has been well worked out, many other features have been suggested for adoption at an early date, including such helpful community aids as co-operative buying, especially of coal and staple food necessities, the employment of a community watchman, tree planting, ample police protection, street cleanliness and the establishment of a bureau which will keep a list of reliable workmen, such as carpenters, plumbers, furnace men, &c., who can be recommended at reasonable prices to the members.

The redevelopment of this area as a private dwelling centre is due primarily to the urgent demand for homes occa-sioned by the scarcity of living accom-modations and also to the improved transit facilities afforded by the Lex-ington Avenue subway and the Broadway subway, with its terminal station, at present at Lexington Avenue and Sixtieth Street, giving quick access to downtown business offices. In the Sixty-first Street block there are approxi-mately forty-five dwellings, and twenty of them have been transferred to new owners, practically all of whom now ocupy them, within the last year. Nearly all of these houses have been remodeled.

The majority still retain the high-stoop entrance, but several have been altered into American-basement houses. Of special note are those at 224, 245 and named comprising S. Merrill Clement, Claude C. Pinney and H. W. Gray. Other committees are to be appointed including one of women, which will have charge of the community buying plan and the adornment of the rear yards.

There is also a Tree Planting Com-mittee, of which William S. Rogers is Chairman. More than $1,000 was raised at a recent meeting to purchase trees for planting within the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Street blocks. A fund will be raised to care for them properly, preventing the early decay which has been the fate of so many trees in the city streets when left to the care of municipal authorities. In addition to those whose names have been mentioned, among the members residing in Sixty-first Street, are Charles L. Hoffman, John R. Green, Thomas C. Bates, Maude S. Jewett, William M. Newson, William A. Minott, James C. Fargo, Dr. John

John R. Green, Thomas C. Bates, Manue S. Jewett, William M. Newson, William A. Minott, James C. Fargo, Dr. John Cocia, John R. Vesey, H. H. Sprague and Charles R. Schliess. Among the Sixty-second Street members are Claude C. Pinney, H. W. Gray, Landgon H. Roper, and Dr. Gilman Thompson. Provision has been made for two classes of members, active and as-sociate, the former being property own-ers and eligible to office while the as-sociate list will comprise tenants and others who may be interested in im-proving the locality. The association will by no means be restricted to the blocks especially mentioned. It is hoped to enlist the interest of all owners and residents in the blocks within the 60's from Second to Park or Madison Ave-nue, thus creating a well organized community body with a comprehensive plan for civic improvement in the entire neighborhood. "We want our association," as Mr. Plunkett expressed it, "to be primarily one of home owners and residents who have decided to live in the section and who are ready to show a real interest in maintaining all of the best charac-teristics for a plonsatit and comfortable residential community. We feel that in formulating this community plan we can be a help to our neighbors in many ways, and through their combined ef-forts we can interest the city authorities whenever necessary to provide such service as is proper for the general benefit. Cleanliness and improved con-ditions in our home area. will be our aims, and we believe we have an oppor-tunity to give a convincing object les-son in civic betterment in our far east side centre near Second Avenue." Among the residents, in addition to several well-known lawyers, are mem-bers of the New York Stock Exchange, bankers, artists, writers and those in

249, which have been remodeled simply but tastefully with white stucco fronts and green trim, the first named, occu-pied by Robert L. Beckwith, having two basement doors, the main one adorned with an old-fashioned bronze knocker. A quaint lantern over the door and the greenery of the window boxes add to its cheerfulness. The house at 245, owned by Maude S. Jewett, a sculptress, retains the high stoop, but altered with the steps on the side. A large green lantern over the entrance, sur-mounted with a plain shield bearing the house number, and the rich green blinds, reveal the possibilities of beautifying an old house without great expense. The one at 249, owned by Rob-ert P. Breese, is somewhat simpler, in the American-basement style, with white stucco and green trim. Several houses are now undergoing changes.

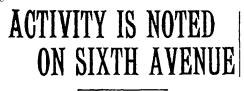

The block is characteristic of The block is characteristic of occu-pancy by the owners, with the good treatment which that implies. To a large extent the same is true of the Sixtysecond Street block, the residence at 235, with its neat green iron railings in front of the parlor floor windows, being pleasantly suggestive of carly Colonial days.

Records show that practically all of the houses in these blocks were built more than forty years ago by the late John D. Crimmins. They were well built and have remained in good condition. The blocks were restricted in 1868 for residential purposes, and anything which might be termed a nuisance was barred from the locality. Those restrictions have thus far been observed, and it is the intention of the association to continue them. In the zoning plan, how-ever, this area was placed in the business district, evidently under the beller that private homes east of Third Avenue would not last much longer. The very reverse, in the last two or three years, has proved to be the case, and a legal committee appointed by the association to look after its special interests is preparing to submit a request to the Board of Estimate within a few days asking that the area be placed in the residential zone.

Beside benefiting this east side section in comfortable appearance, property values have advanced materially. Prior to the war, there was little demand for the houses in these blocks at from $15,000 to $20,000 apiece. Their frontages vary from 16 to 20 feet. Today, in their remodelled state, they have practically doubled in value from Not only have the exteriors been 1914. tastefully altered but the community plan involves a beautifying of the rear yards and this has already been started in three or four cases by the removal of the ugly board fences and the substitution of a low railing a few inches high.

The president of the association is Royal E. T. Riggs, a lawyer who ob-tained the rank of major in the army infantry service. Alfred C. Coxe, Jr., is vice-president, Louis C. Haggerty, secretary and Paul Plunkett of the banking firm of William C. Langley is treasurer. The legal committee whose duties will be to see that the restrictions are rigidly observed consists of Mr. Riggs, Mr. Coxe, Mr. Haggerty and Captain Rogers H. Bacon. The Committee on Affairs consists of F. Carroll Taylor, Clarence P. Wyckoff and Langdon H. Roper. A Admission has been Committee on

Among the residents, in addition t several well-known lawyers, are men-bers of the New York Stock Exchange bankers, artists, writers and those i various commercial pursuits. There ar two churches in the blocks, the People' Methodist Church occupying a large frontage on the north side of Sixty first Street, near the middle of the block, while in Sixty-second Street, nea Second Avenue, is the Roman Catholi Church of Our Lady of Peace. in the Catholic ACTIVITY IS NOTED ON SIXTH AVENUE: PLANS ARE DRAWN FOR SEVERAL LARGE ... activity Considerable has been noted during recent months in real estate in the Sixth Avenue area, particularly the midtown section. The number of transactions in properties on this thoroughfare in the past six months was reported as being much larger than for similar periods previously, and several large buildings have been projected.

One of these, the office skyscraper to occupy the site of the old Hippodrome in the easterly block front between Forty-third and Forty-fourth Streets, will rank among the tallest of Manhattan's buildings. It will be eighty-three stories and about 1,100 feet high, according to preliminary plans announced by the Fred F. Another development in prospect to change the character of an extensive area is the Rockefeller project for the land between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, Forty-eighth to Fifty-second Streets. Although the plan for development of an opera centre with a new Metropolitan Opera House as the hub has been abandoned, the Rockefeller interests are planning other large building operations. Among the building operations. Mong the building operations now under way is the sixteen-story bank and office structure on the northeast corner of Thirty-fifth Street, to house the Herald Square Branch of the Central Hanover Bank & Trust Company. The $1,000,000 John David Building facing Broad-way, Thirty-second Street and Sixth Avenue was added recently to the list of new buildings, as was also the Herald Square Building, twenty-four stories, facing Thirty-sixth Street, on the northerly portion of the old Herald Building block. It has been well rented, bearing out the view of the Sixth Avenue Association that modern showroom and office quar-ters on the avenue are in demand. V. Clement Jenkins, vice president and general manager of the associa-tion, points out that plans have been prepared for several skyscrapers, as high as forty stories, to be carried out after demolition of the elevated structure, over which much contro-versy has arisen. Apparently nearly ell interested parties have agreed Favor Demolition of Elevated.

Several factors have entered into the recent activity in this area. One has been the prospect of early demolition of the elevated and projected construction of a subway; another has been the widening of Sixth Avenue Extension at the southerly end of the avenue, a part of the new industrial area centring in Varick Street, and a third has been the overflow from well-built-up portions of Fifth Avenue and Broadway. The elevated structure would be torn down in Fifty-third Street also, and that section has participated in the

there has been a large increase in values, and high-class apartments and office buildings have replaced less pretentious structures. The block front on the east side of Sixth Avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets, was sold last month by the Evolution Realty Corporation to the Alkov Real Estate Corporation, headed by Louis Kov-ner. The frontages are 197 feet on the avenue, 125 feet on West Twen-ty-fifth Street and 127 feet on West Twenty-sixth Street. The land is oc-cupled by fourteen three and four story brick store and loft buildings. No announcement has yet been made of building plans.

No announcement has yet been made of building plans. Herman Paul and Joseph Rosen-blatt hold a twenty-one-year lease on 972-74 Sixth Avenue, adjoining the corner of Thirty-fifth Street, and are reported to be planning a new build-ing. The site is owned by the Wieners estate. Wieners estate.

Plan a Large Building.

The David Wolfe Bishop estate, which has owned the five-story building at the southwest corner of Sixth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street since 1890, has leased it to the Forty-eighth Street Leasing Corporation, which is reported as planning the erection of a large building on the expiration of leases expiring in May 1. director. In January Joseph F. A. O'Donnell, operator, resold the northwest corner of Thirty-ninth Street and Sixth Avenue to the Garrick Building Company, Lee Shubert, president. The Shuberts own the Maxine Elliott Theatre adjoining this plot on the west and now have a building site with 200 feet frontage on West Thirty-ninth Street and 50 feet on Sixth Avenue. In this deal Mr. O'Donnell took in exchange the Garrick Theatre on a plot 75 by 100 feet, in Thirty-fifth Street just east of Sixth Avenue, announcing that he would hold the property for a re-sale.
