

resonant will

readymade manual

This is not an architecture. It is a practice by and for the people. Materials extracted from the ground to construct a tower, a church and a sunken plaza in the shadows of the city become the tools to forge a new landscape. Pavers, panels, cladding, fixtures, and substructure are returned to the ground, shifting space to accommodate accessibility, circulation, gathering, flora, fauna, festival, and protest. Deforming the site unveils an interstitial space that negotiates between nature and urban, built and unbuilt, land and water. Where need or desire manifests, form takes shape. We all have a role to play in resonant will. WW
